LONDON

The Anglo-German Law Society was founded in London as a student organization in 2002. Its goals are to enhance the interdisciplinary dialogue between English and German students, practitioners, academics and universities. This network shall support our members with learning, understanding and practicing in both legal systems. Our members get the opportunity to connect with people in both systems. The Society is actively represented at King's College London, University College London and Humboldt University in Berlin.

Understanding common law and civil law systems

The society organises debates, talks, workshops and lectures in co-operation with universities, public institutions and law firms across Europe. The Society's careers platform provides its members the opportunity to meet future employers, to gain practical work experience and to learn about job perspectives in an international legal setting. Furthermore, we support our members throughout their studies, introduce them to further educational programmes and organise study groups in both London and Berlin. In co-operation with our partners, we offer learning resources in both legal systems for undergraduate and postgraduate students. The Society also publishes the Anglo-German Law Journal which aims to offer a platform for young European jurists to share their views.
